in fields of several acres or in pieces of wood or cloth a few inches long, or simply represented by lines drawn in the sand.

In fact their material embodiment ceases to be of any importance, and we have made the discovery which is especially credited to the Greeks:

The discovery of form

Danger of the gift of abstraction

• It tends to look down on the pedestrian accumulation of facts, and in trying its wings to soar far beyond the available evidence up to a grand synthesis that is very largely its own creation.

• That is exactly what happened to the early Greek philosophers who asked all embracing questions like "What is the genesis of existing things?" "Is the world ultimately
