for explanation seems to be satisfied only by the discovery that what appears to be new and different was there all the time. Hence the search for an underlying identity, a persistent stuff, a substance that is conserved in spite of qualitative changes and in terms of which these changes can be explained.

• Thales was the first to attempt to simplify reality on a rational basis.

• "To introduce unity and tidiness into the world is something which appeals to man's aesthetic no less than to his rational interests, and, when pushed to its extreme limits, leads to the view that there is one and only one kind of material." — The Mind and its Place in Nature by Charlie Dunbar Broad.

IMPORTANT NOTES

• According to Aristotle, arche means a) starting-point or beginning b) originating cause.
